Invesco RAFI Strategic US ETF

Analyst Report

The Invesco RAFI Strategic US ETF tracks a proprietary index that targets U.S. companies that exhibit strong sales, cash flow, return on capital, and book value. The companies are assigned a score based on the ratio of sales to assets in the prior year, and on the growth of sales-to-assets in the previous five years. Component companies are then ranked, with the top tier being eligible for inclusion. Companies are weighted according to their scores. The result is a portfolio of large- and mid-cap U.S. equities that has a markedly different sector breakdown compared with a market-cap weighted S&P 500 ETF. Fund fees are reasonable, though more expensive than some of the cheapest plain-vanilla U.S. equity ETFs on the market. Is it worth it? The fund launched in September 2018, so there's limited real-world trading but it has had some periods of outperformance compared with S&P 500 funds. For investors who believe in the strategy, IUS could be a good complement to core U.S. equity exposure. Investors should compare price, performance and portfolio to plain-vanilla index ETFs as well as other U.S. factor strategies.
