Vanguard Russell 3000 ETF

Analyst Report

This ETF seeks to replicate the Russell 3000 Index, and as such includes exposure to companies of all different sizes and classified in all sectors of the U.S. economy. With nearly 3,000 individual holdings, few ETFs offer exposure to more individual securities. VTHR, like many All Cap Equities ETFs, is an appealing option for investors looking to capture low cost, broad exposure to equity markets and maintain a simplified portfolio; those seeking to fine tune sector or size exposure may want to consider more targeted funds. This fund can be useful both as a core component of a long term portfolio or as a means of establishing quick exposure to risky assets as part of a shorter-term strategy. Those using VTHR as part of a long term strategy should note that while companies of all sizes are included, there is a heavy tilt towards large cap stocks; those seeking balanced exposure to small and mid caps may need to use additional funds. VTHR is a blunt asset allocation tool, offering an impressive degree of diversification and an extremely cost efficient fee structure. The option to trade commission free in Vanguard accounts may further increase the appeal to cost conscious investors, and the unique attributes of Vanguard products may make this ETF a better choice than IWM.
