FactSet Analyst Report

RGLO seeks long-term capital growth by investing in companies of any market capitalization from around the world through a multi-style, multi-manager approach. The fund adviser provides portfolio management services using qualitative analysis and a quantitative model-based optimization process. The optimization process evaluates trade-offs among risk, return, turnover, and transaction costs to determine the optimal portfolio positioning. An initial composite portfolio is constructed by aggregating money manager model portfolios based on their strategy allocations, adjusting security weights accordingly. The quantitative model-based optimization process and qualitative analysis refine the portfolio to meet desired exposure, minimize turnover, and minimum holding requirements. Money managers may use fundamental, quantitative, or blended investment approaches. As an actively managed ETF, the portfolio manager has full discretion to adjust the portfolio at any time. Prior to October 1, 2025, the fund traded under the name Global Equity Active ETF.
